Some information about Bremen: Bremen – tradition and modernity

Bremen's history stretches back 1,200 years. You can still see traces of yesteryear around the city today, most notably with the UNESCO World Heritage town hall and Roland statue. Legacies of the city's trading past in and around the market square include the Hanseatic Cross and the Schütting, the seat of the chamber of commerce.

It is the home to the Bremen Town Musicians, tourist attractions and internationally operating economic clusters – Bremen is a destination with a wide-ranging appeal. Bremen, the two-cities-state with Bremen inland and Bremerhaven located close to the North Sea shore, has a long maritime tradition. Maritime industries still represent the heart of Bremen's economy and marine/maritime sciences are strongly concentrated here. More than 30,000 students are enrolled in the universities in Bremen and plenty of institutes are working in international excellence clusters!

Bremen is an important location for international trade with port operations and logistics that are in demand worldwide as well as with leading-edge technologies in automotive engineering. Furthermore Bremen is a main centre of the European aerospace industry and among the first addresses for the wind energy sector on- and offshore. Last but not least: The headquarters of Beck's Beer and the famous football team 'Werder Bremen' are based in this international city.
